Interview Tips

Source: US Department of Labor

Answer Questions Directly

Go right to the point. Don't elaborate. When asked a question which seems to require a complex answer, try asking back "What would you like to know?"

Stick to Business

Don't wander away from the subject. Avoid controversy.

Ask Some Good Questions

But ask them carefully. Find out more about the company you might be going to work for. Don't ask when your first raise will be, what vacation and benefit policies are, or when you will be promoted. An interested interviewer will make these things clear for you. Otherwise, the time to discuss salary and benefits is when the job is offered.

Watch Your Interview Manners

Don't smoke or chew gum. Sit at the edge of your chair and keep good eye contact with your interviewer.

Show Confidence

When the interviewer tells you what needs to be done in this position, relate your experience to their needs. Let them know that you can do this job.

If You Are Asked About Salary

Keep an open attitude. Let them know what you have been earning, but be sure to show them that the salary which you will accept depends on the quality and prospects for the position.
